Yanhan Liu is a Ph.D. Candidate in the Department of Architecture at the National University of Singapore, under the supervision of Dr. Zhang Ye. Her research interests lie primarily in community public spaces and intergenerational interaction. Her recent research work has explored the role of the built environment in promoting intergenerational interactions, with a particular focus on the Singaporean context.

Prior to pursuing her Ph.D., Yanhan obtained a Master of Science in Architecture from Syracuse University. She also worked as a research assistant at Syracuse University and has practical experience in architecture and urban design, focusing on urban and regional regeneration projects.
