Wang Jun is a PhD student in the Department of Architecture at the National University of Singapore. Her research interests centre on ageing-in-place, public housing neighbourhoods, and social infrastructure. She is broadly interested in how older adults sustain everyday social connections in highly planned urban environments, including through food spaces, shared amenities, and informal forms of neighbourhood sociality. Her work engages with questions of ageing and urban environments, community-based planning, public housing, and participatory approaches to neighbourhood design.
